Mars Defense Force: Defending Human Colonies – Interview Transcript [Part I]

Written on July 2, 2015.

This is the transcript of the explosive original testimony of Randy Cramer (aka Captain Kaye) who claims he served on Mars as part of an elite Mars Defense Force for just over 17 years. The main purpose was to protect a "Mars Colony Corporation" that had five civilian settlements on Mars from indigenous Martians. In the interview, Cramer describes how he traveled to secret Moon base to sign papers committing him to a 20-year tour of duty. He was then transported to a military base on Mars where his unit engaged in territorial battles with the native Reptilian and Insectoid Martians. This was Cramer's second interview in a five-part series where he described his training as a child super soldier to serve as a member of an elite Marine Corps unit that provides personnel for a secret space program with military bases on the Moon, Mars and other parts of the solar system.

The audio of the skype interview was released on April 8 2014, and was the first time Cramer had come forward with his "total recall" of events that occurred during his 20-year service from 1987 to 2007. In an earlier interview with Eve Lorgen in 2006, Cramer used the pseudonym "Zed" and described what he recalled at the time of his contact experiences with several extraterrestrial races. Cramer claims that in 2014, he was authorized to reveal his secret space program experiences through his military superiors in the USMC special section.

M.S. We are back with Captain Kaye and we are going to be discussing, what is the series of events that happened after he completed Project Moonshadow around the age of 17, and when he went off to do his service with the US Marine (Corps) special section. Randy why don't you tell us what happened once you completed or graduated from the Project Moon Shadow.
R.C. Sure, it was a pretty short span of time between completing the program and then I would say there was about a 90 day period where a lot of the final testing, where OK, we've spent as much time as we going to spend training this thing, and spent as much time as we have building it, now we have to really see if it's going to do what it's going to do under a lot of different conditions. So there was an interesting 90 day period of going to a lot of different places as far as ecozones, as far as temperatures, environmental zones around the planet, to see how we operate under different conditions, and different scenarios. Sometimes working with or playing war games with other special forces units. In some cases actual live fire training exercizes where for us it's a testing exercise, but for somebody else in another country it's very real and they're dead because of it. They were the live fire exercise that we got to be tested on. But certainly considered not a threatening enough force that you're going to send your high tech machinery and get them damaged or something. You can pretty much guarantee that if they're not broken, the other team is going to have no chance of winning.
Armed forces around the world have lots of AK47s and no shoes. These guys are not very equipped against skilled armed forces. If you're in a test scenario, sure, why not send five of your supersoldiers against 50 of those guys and see how they do. Because you know your guys are going to win, but you want to see how they test under live conditions that's a safe test. So after 90 days of that, then I was picked up under a regular routine pick up in the middle of the night, and then taken to Lunar Operations Command, and checked [into] a small living quarters area which is not much more than a jail cell size, but not a jail cell, I mean much more civilized than that. Not meant to make you feel like a caged animal, but about the same size … [with] a sink and a bathroom off to the side, a little desk and a chair. Your typical set up, like a college dorm or anything. We're checked into that and told to wait until the sound of the bell out in the hall, and that was when everyone was supposed to come out and go to the hallway at the end of the door.

Before that, two military personnel, but again [wearing] whatever sort of LOC jumpsuits, battleship gray with some gold fringe. There were two of those they looked like maybe standard security guards, not much more than that or anything else. They weren't heavily armed, but they had side arms. They escorted us, me, one at a time, as far as I could observe seeing other people coming and going in the same hallway being escorted by another two of these individuals in their gray suits with the gold fringe, and was taken to a large waiting area outside what was clearly a large bank of cubicles in which a lot of bureaucrats in various military uniforms were pushing paperwork. A lot of people were sitting around waiting for their names or their numbers to be called up, to be signaled to come and speak to these people. It's a fairly large well lit area where everything is done, in yellow or goldish colors. That was the color scheme at that time anyway. Fashion or any other thing could have changed that by now, but at the time it was meant to be and sort of feel like a bright sunflower yellow. Like you're waiting for the dentist or something, but in a really big room.

After some time of waiting, you're called to come and sit down in a cubicle and have a junior officer in a uniform which I don't quite recognize, but he identified [himself] as being an Air Force officer. This is an Air Force uniform that I'm not familiar with as far as seeing in the regular part of the Air Force. So I'm suspecting this had something to do again, with a parallel Air Force branch and what their uniforms look like, but since I'm not super familiar with them, I'm only guessing at that.

He then pulls out a stack of paperwork and says, here's your contract, I'm supposed to go over this with you, and talk about any questions you have, and get you to initial and sign in the right places, and then you move along. There was some kind of discussion of him saying, OK, this is what you are going to do, you're signing for a 20 year tour of service, but again don't worry, it's going to be alright. You'll be done, we'll wipe all those ugly memories out of your head that you're not going to want to remember anyway, and then we'll interject you back to right after we took you and age reversal, and you'll get to live your whole life all over again, and it'll be fine. You won't lose any time, you won't lose any years, and in fact you'll come back to a nice cushy job. We'll take care of you, you'll be fine. Lots of reassurances that it's no big deal. Everyone does this every day, it's just the way we do things now. A certain amount of explaining what's in the paper work, and what's in the contract, and [you] just initial and sign in all the right places.
[7.01]
After not much debate or discussion, I had a few questions and he answered them, and eventually I realized as he was explaining, "look, you know, we sign this paperwork and you can move out of here. You can walk out of here to do your next thing, or we can sit here and talk a really long time about the paperwork that you have to eventually sign anyway." He was a nice enough guy, he wasn't being a jerk about it or anything. But it was clear, this has to be done. Paperwork has to be signed, and if I have any questions, ask them, but it really doesn't matter. Just sign and we'll move on. And so after that was done, then being escorted back to the temporary living quarters, and then being told to go ahead and take a break. Again wait for a bell in the hall, and then kind of dozing off, not sure for how long, hearing the bell in the hallway and then going out, going down to a long hallway, doorway at the end of this hallway. Everyone who is in these temporary quarter living rooms is coming out into the hall, and heading on down.
[8.07]

Then we open up to larger doors, which then opens up to a much larger room, a hangar bay essentially – we were right off the hangar bay. There's a very large vehicle, I would call it more of a delta or bat wing shape, as opposed to round shape or disc shaped. More of a delta triangle, but maybe wider. What you would call a bat type shape, but pretty tall as far as from the bottom to the top part of the vehicle, I would say it was thirty, thirty-five feet. It looked like it was multiple stories and levels inside which appeared to be the case when we were inside, and the wingspan was probably, hard to judge distances like that, from that level, but I'd say it was easily between four hundred and five hundred feet wide, wingspan, from tip to tip. Then nose to tail, less than 150 feet. The front section had a large rounded nose on it, and you could see there was a slightly curved window, surface was curved, that appeared to be where the pilots might be sitting or operating from. It was pretty high up, kind of like [the cockpit] in a 747 which is up higher than the main part of the vehicle, kind of similar to that, but again with the dimensions I stated.
So I got in there, there were lots of reclining lounge seats, that sort of memory foam thing. You kind of sink in, you hear this air moving sound that kind of gets to form around, it gets a good grip apparently on your body. There's some strap ends, and after some time of everybody fiddling and getting ready, once everyone is secure, there's a few people that help everyone get sorted out if anyone is confused. Then the lights in the vehicle dim, and not unlike in an airplane, you hear the pilot over the speaker saying, "welcome everybody I'll be your captain for this shuttle flight from Lunar Operations Command to your next station which you will not have clearance to know until we arrive. As soon as you arrive you'll have security clearance to know where your destination is, but until we go there, you're not cleared. Before we leave we are not cleared to know where the destination is, but the moment we arrive at our destination, then we're cleared to know where we are." I think that was very amusing, in my own sort of way. I get amused about the way they do security, and make these levels of secrecy and clearance.
He did something interesting, which I wasn't expecting. He said, "none of you are going to see home for a very long time, it's going to be a while. And so before we go we're going to take one last look, and everyone is going to take one last good look at home, and give us a moment to think about why you want to come back, and why you want to protect the people and the family that are there, and why this is something worth fighting for," or something to that effect. He said then, "we'll pause and take a good long glance for a minute, and then we'll be off, and won't be back for 20 years."

Interestingly enough, the feeling inside the vehicle when he pulled out of the hangar bay and positioned himself at whatever distance he was from the earth, whatever perfect distance they wanted so that when the visual array came on, and the ceilings became a projection of what the vehicle was seeing in front of it. You had, not unlike in a planetarium when you are lying back in a chair and you, by artificially having that space projected on the ceiling, can have [a] feeling or experience that you're in space, or that space is around you. When you're moving you get that sense you're having artificial movement or something like that. Pretty much a similar way by having a big projection, a very clear projection in front of you of what's happening. You really had a sense that we were all hovering in space in these chairs, staring out at Earth, getting our big look for the last time, and it was awe-inspiring. It absolutely stands out as one of the most amazing moments in my entire life. The moment I was at the perfect position, staring at the planet and being able to see it in its entirety. And not in a picture, it was there. It was moving and the clouds were moving, and the lightning storms were flickering and there's activity that's moving very slowly or very slight of it so far away you can't see but you know it's there, and there's an ability to see that's not anything like you could see it any other way. I mean seeing it in a picture is not the same, seeing a really good high definition image on a big screen just isn't the same. Having the sense of being so huge that you are right there looking at it, Having that image be so clear that it looked like you were looking at the real image and the ceiling wasn't there, but it was there, I'm sure. It was just awesome.
You know it was amazing to see that there was this entire thing that's alive, it's very clear from looking at Earth from space that she's alive. That's not just because there's life on the surface of her, or just because we live there. There's something very clear when you see this giant ball in space that it's alive, and that there's all kinds of people there. You don't see borders. It's a world without borders when you're staring at it from space. There's no lines that divide the countries. So you don't look at it and think there's America, there's the United States. Hey there's Germany. You say oh wow, that's North America connected to South America, that's Europe connected to Asia, and connected to Africa. You really just see that it's all connected and doesn't have dividing lines, and from that perspective, whatever anybody could be bickering or arguing about down on the surface seems incredibly small, literally incredibly small, and you just get this sense that wow, I'm really in a special place. Not just staring at this thing, not just looking at her, but I'm in special place that I get to do something where I get to help keep her safe, and everyone who lives there safe, and all life that lives there now safe, and maybe if I'm lucky, all people who will ever live there, and all life that will ever live there safe in the future because of something that I do now. That just stuck with me, and struck me. I had a moment where I felt awe inspired, awe struck and that irregardless of however this was going to end up, this was OK, and this was special and I felt alright about that, and I felt completely OK with being in that special position. I was OK with that responsibility. I was happy about that. I was OK with it. It was just an amazing experience.

M.S. You want to maybe explain a little about Lunar Operations Command. I mean is it on the Farside of the Moon, is it an underground facility, how big is it?

[16.34]

R.C. That's a good question and I can't answer all those questions because I only had seen a certain amount of it. What I saw coming in to land was a certain sizable base on the surface, in which there's a large, large landing platform. It's kind of terraced up from the ground, from the lunar surface, and the platform, you could have put three or four of these things [triangular shaped craft] on top of there. It was probably almost a square mile platform on which to land things on, or at least half that or more. Then there were some smaller vehicles, kind of lined up in a row. A few, almost concert-like buildings, but they were huge, they were really big, they had a rounded feature. A couple of very large squarish rectangular buildings that didn't seem anything extraordinary or unusual, and then once inside, a number of hallways, elevators, that clearly went down to the subsurface, below the lunar surface. I got the impression from the times I was there, and the areas I got to see that the place was absolutely massive. That station that I was at was at least the size of a medium city, at least. There was probably more than one of those medium size city complexes on the back side of the moon that we have something to do with, and are terrestrial controlled, but there are also, from what I understand, because the backside of the moon has been used for so long, by so many different species.

It's kind of like Antarctica, it has these different areas where different countries and people can say we got this area, and we got this, and everybody respects everybody's claim or area. So there are a number of areas that have been habituated by a number of different ETs that have had bases there for a long time, and they're not going anywhere, apparently. Whether people are friendly or hostile, it's kind of a neutral territory, so there's places where those who don't get along with others, cannot/be not too far from each other. But they don't attack each other, they respect each other's neutral space there on the back side of the moon, for whatever reason that the contracts, diplomatic arrangements is for that.

I think it because it goes back such a very long time that everyone respects it. From what I also understand there's been a couple times when war did come to the back side of the moon and it was bad enough in such a way that everyone said no, no, not here. This is neutral space for everybody to do what they need to do, but we can't fight here or else we could risk losing the whole thing to somebody else or something. I think that was the deal. So I think it's a pretty interesting mix of who's there, what's there, we're there. What's spread out over just what I've seen and what has been discussed with me. Clearly, not even all of what is there and what's known about it has been part of my knowledge, my privy to what I've been briefed on. That's about as much as I know about Lunar Operations Command.

[20.24]
M.S. The Shuttle craft that was taking you to its destination, do you know what the capacity of that was?
[20.32]
RC. I would have to guess because it was clearly multiple floors or levels in the interior and where I was at was clearly one area, and one floor and one interior, and whether the levels above and below were the same, or whether they were occupied by other cargo, storage, machinery or technology, I don't know. If I was going to guess I would have to say that it had a capacity to move a capacity between a thousand and two thousand troops at a time. Maybe more.
[21.17]
M.S. OK, that's quite big.
[21.20]
R.C. It was definitely built to move bodies for the most part. Again I'm only presuming maybe some other parts were also cargo. But it was definitely designed to move a lot of people the way it was set up.
[21.32]
M.S. With the papers that you signed was there any kind of description as to which particular service you were signing up for? Was it a more nebulous entity? What details do you remember from the papers that you signed? Who were you signing the next 20 years over to?
[21.54]
R.C. I was signing the next 20 years over to the Earth Defense Force, as a marine, as a United States Marine. That's a question I asked, so I'm glad you asked this question …. I was like, "OK, who am I working for, what am I going to be here, help define this for me." He said, "well you're a marine, right," and I said "Yes". He says, "you're still going to be a marine, you will always be a United States Marine, that is always what and who you will be." He said, "but this is a contract, we are contracting you to the Earth Defense Force. The Earth Defense Force, once you've contracted to them, will have the ability to sub-contract you to one of the other organizations that needs people, or parcel you out to any number of EDF stations throughout the solar system." He was like, “ah, most of them are boring, you’ll probably going to be guarding nothing, or listening to nothing, or you might get a really boring job on the ground somewhere.” He was really very [much] playing whatever was going to happen down, or wherever I might be, down. Which, not knowing where other people end up, I can’t say whether that’s part of the routine recruiters do, or whether he’s just trying to be honest. I think he was more just trying to get me to be happy with whatever his answers were so I would initial and sign so he could go on to the next person.

He said, “you’re going to be a member of EDF, and depending on where they send you from that point, will depend on what uniform you wear, and what people call you and what rank and so forth you hold. But you’ll always be a marine, and you may be something else temporarily or you may have to do something else temporarily. You’re going to know that as soon as you get to where you’re getting.” Part of his explanation was, “look, I can’t tell you what you’re doing next because I’m not cleared for that.”
[23.51]
He said, “all I know is that when you sign these papers it will set other actions into motion so that when you board the shuttle that leaves, another set of papers will be issued to you that will be opened upon your arrival. Those will be your new orders and your new assignment, and everything that you need to know. But before you leave, you don’t have a need to know that yet. It’s going to be in another file and when you get there, that will be handed to you, and you’ll get to know where you are, and someone will explain that to you.”
[24.24]
So he was vague enough, but tried to be reassuring enough that I wasn’t going to lose my identity, or that I was not going to be a marine, or sign over to some other organization that would compromise my values or ethics as a marine. He wanted me to feel comfortable about that, and just secure in the knowledge that we do this every day and it’s all going to be normal and fine, and it’s just go to be fine which is what he wanted me to be reassured of. But he was vague enough because they weren’t cleared to know that answer yet, so I wasn’t going to find out until I got to the destination.

[25.07]
M.S. So at that point in time, your knowledge of the Earth Defense Force was that similar to some kind of multinational covert agency dealing with space operations, kind of analogous to the United Nations where you can have different branches of the US [military] serving in different capacities, peacekeepers, advisers and so forth. In a sense, this is what was happening in space with the Earth Defense Force.
[25.33]
R.C. Yes, correct. My knowledge is that was basically correct and that again since my actual knowledge or briefing on this information at this time, at that time, was limited. I did get a debriefing when I got back 20 years later which, there was a little bit more. There was a farewell ceremony, a kind of big thing. I do remember at that time getting a little more of a speech about the goals and purpose of the Earth Defense Force and why it was put together. Essentially, in a similar way that these other separate parallel organizations were created. The Earth Defense Force was a parallel yet separate organization that was created mostly out of bodies out of the United Nations. Probably centered around the Security Council, because they're the Security Council and they co-opt anything that has to do with defense and security. So pretty much out of the Security Council, the bodies that would form the EDF were formed and put together. This parallel organization was formed and stationed off of Lunar Operations Command so they would have as little contact with the surface as possible so that there would be as little possible bleed for security as possible. It would essentially create this sphere around the planet, and outside the planet to protect it from all things that might be harmful which we had come to know by that time. There were a few things that we should be concerned about and that just standing around with open arms was not going to be a good policy. We should have some kind of perimeter defense for whatever is coming next, or for whatever our next step into the intergalactic brotherhood is. You don't necessarily want to do that without a guard dog on your front yard.
[27.26]
M.S. OK, so what was the destination and what was revealed to you when you arrived there.

[27.33]
R.C. The destination was Mars, it was the Mars Colony Corporation headquarters. There were five settlements, the main settlement was called something like Mars Prime; no sorry, it was Aries Prime. They are real creative. Instead of calling it Mars they called it Aries. So Aries Prime was the primary settlement, and the first settlement where the Mars Colony Corporation headquarters was. Then there were four additional settlements where I never set foot on. From Aries Prime [where] we were, we landed, and set foot on to a platform there and walked in to a very large facility right across the open Martian plateau which was hot, and [with] a cold breeze and thin but breathable air. The temperature range is quite wide so you really don't spend any time out in the open Martian desert without an environment suit. Absolutely not, it's pretty fatal to do so. I think that there was some dome shielding protection and we were kind of like down Aries Prime, down in a crater almost. There's a natural canyon wall that kind of comes up round, it sunk in so the wind doesn't hit it too hard. It was that particular time that we came out, it was, it felt like a hot day but there was a very cold wind that was blowing and you felt like you came out at 8000 or 9000 feet or something like that. The air was very thin, but totally breathable. I was really quite surprised to be honest, to have them just open up the door and say alright head for that other door and have us walk right outside but we did.
M.S. Was the Martian terrain as we see in NASA photographs, with the red sky, and the reddish soil?
[30.07]
R.C. Yes, absolutely. It's red, red, red everywhere because certainly all that iron oxide that's left on the surface. It makes the main reflection red everywhere you look, and so not unlike, I'm trying to think now. Yes it was red sand, rocky, sandy from very fine textured sand to big boulder rocks, and very red. The only exception is sunrise and sunset, which for some strange reason, I shouldn't maybe say a strange reason because it's physics I suppose, there's a period of time for maybe 15 or 20 minutes depending on the season when the sun is dropping below the horizon and it goes from red to purple. For about 15 mins everything turns this amazing shade of purple. The Martian sunsets for that reason, they're not that bright, because the sun is pretty far away, but also amazed at how much light, being that far away, you still have. I distrust some of the things that people say about life on other planets and living on other planets, having been to another one and going, you know this is little different than what I thought it would be and what people said it is. Yes that sun is dimmer farther away, but it's still amazing how [much] light you cast when you stick out your hand, or how much shadow is being cast when you look to see behind you to see what your shadow has cast. It's still quite a lot of light but that purple thing really at sunset and at sunrise, is just really amazing, it's really cool, and it's short you only get to see one time of day, but it's kind of dim purple everywhere.

M.S. Can you tell us about Aries Prime. When was that settlement first established, who are the colonists, and was it run by a particular country like the US, or was it multinational, or was it a corporate entity in charge.

[32.34]

R.C. My understanding is that the Mars Colony Corporation, again like every other part of the EDF [Earth Defense Force] is put together from parcels, service persons, scientists, advisors, engineers, business people, anybody that you want to put into the pool to be utilized, is put into the pool, and from those pools, decision makers pull out names and make lists of people that decide to do things. My understanding is that the Mars Colony Corporation was set up by multinational interests so that of all these different countries that participate they got together with their various parcels of business people, engineers, mining people, military advisors, intel people to get together because we need to form the Mars Colony Corporation so that we can go there and make it profitable. You know we can't just spend trillions of dollars going to Mars for purposes of exploration without finding ways of extracting resources from it and make it pay for itself. Otherwise it's just not going to go. So it was put together, all those various individuals, I don't know exactly who they were, or who picked them, or what that process is other than whatever individual processes those countries have to put people into the pool, and which ever committees out of the [UN] Security Council, the EDF, or MJ-12 or ACIO [Advanced Contact Intelligence Organization] will get to decide then who does what.

The Mars Colony Corporation was set up in about 1974/1975. My understanding is that we were on Mars the very first time around the mid-60s, but really didn't try to do anything serious, or really prepared to do anything with that until the 1970s. My understanding is that our first exploratory mission that was sent there to stay any length of time was 1970. Then after a few years it was decided that we were ready to go ahead and establish a Mars Colony Corporation foothold, and set up a few settlements and attempt to do some mining, and extract some resources to make it pay for itself. Apparently that was about 1975, when the Mars Colony Corporation set foot on Mars and started its first mining operation. That was 1975 to my understanding, as I was briefed.

This is part 2 [click here for part 1] of the transcript of the explosive original testimony of Randy Cramer (aka Captain Kaye) who claims he served on Mars as part of an elite Mars Defense Force for just over 17 years. The main purpose was to protect a "Mars Colony Corporation" that had five civilian settlements on Mars from indigenous Martians. In the interview, Cramer describes how he traveled to secret Moon base to sign papers committing him to a 20 year tour of duty. He was then transported to a military base on Mars where his unit engaged in territorial battles with the native Reptilian and Insectoid Martians. This was Cramer's second interview in a five part series where he described his training as a child super soldier to serve as a member of an elite Marine Corps unit that provides personnel for a secret space program with military bases on the Moon, Mars and other parts of the solar system.

Mars Defense Force: Defending Human Colonies – Interview Transcript [Part II]

M.S. Right, now of course you arrived there on Mars around 1987, and 1975 was when Aries Prime was set up. Now this of course was during the Cold War, so was the Soviet Union a part of the Earth Defense Force and the running of Aries Prime?

[35.41]

R.C. Absolutely. Yes, the US, Russia, China, Germany, I mean everybody cooperated together. Absolutely it was taking place, and I have had this question a lot. How is it that these people cooperate, while at the same time, everyone is fighting. Like, who's lying or is it just a show> I think the real answer to that is that the people who have separated themselves from regular state authorities over decades ago to establish the parallel organizations, are so separate that the people who don't know what's really going on, are really fighting with each other. They are all having all kinds of problems with each other, and hate each other, and want to kill each other. The people who have set themselves about that have done that other thing, which is we are going to cooperate for mutual goals and benefits, and try to sort out all these other problems down below over time by keeping them separate. So that's just a little aside that explains why they do that.

M.S. I see, so at this point you are going to begin your official duties so what is it that you are now officially recruited into?

[37.02]

R.C. At that point I arrive at Aries Prime, and at that point we all get informed that we are now members of the Mars Defense Force (MDF). The MDF is the specific military organization, private contracted military organization which is specifically contracted to serve under the MCC [Mars Colony Corporation] to protect and defend the Mars Colony Corporation and its interests. We got informed you are now a member of the Mars Defense force, you will be assigned a chit, a little card, paper work that is going to tell which shuttle you are going to get on. Then you are going to get on that shuttle and that shuttle is going to take you to a station and that station is where you are going to be probably for the next 20 years, and when you get to that station then you will get informed exactly what you are doing, and exactly who you are working [with], and receive all necessary training equipment, etc., when you get there.

[38.11]
So I get my chit, I got my stacks of paper work, wandering out on to the tarmac again, being directed towards which shuttle I got to be on. This time, these vehicles are pretty small as far as not being much bigger than half a bus. They're like half a city bus, they're not that big. I think these things only sat about 20 guys, plus a pilot and a co-pilot up front and rows of seats kind of facing each other with a door out the back. So you come up, get in, sit down. Seats aren't even all full in this particular vehicle, there are only like 15, 16 people, so we had a few empty seats. Unlike the larger vehicle which was a very smooth, very quiet lift-off, take-off, landing, not a lot of movement or momentum or disturbances, this vehicle was kind of loud and you could definitely feel that you were kind of shaking and moving when it lifted up off the ground… [It] seemed to do most of its maneuvering at between 15-20 feet off the ground, it was a kind of low to the ground vehicle. I think it could go higher but staying low to the ground meant it was less a target, … [inaudible] could be a target for anything that was higher in the air.
[39.47]
We spent like what seemed like … three or four hours of flying across this red rocky landscape. So we got to forward station Zebra which is where I spent the next 17 plus years of my life as a member of the special tactical operations division of 098 Forward Station Zebra which also housed in a sister division unit which was less than a 100 feet from the main station. So that there are kind of like two separate stations right next to each other, which [was] division 097. Our sister division was 097, we were division 098 Special Tactical Operations Division, Mars Defense Force, Forward Station Zebra.
We got there and we are introduced to that facility and again we are met by some young enlisted people who are already stationed there, walked us around, took us into the interior of the structure and then walked us around what I call, we called, "the horseshoe" because the main living quarters in the barracks was in the back, farthest retreat point as you come in the front, and the farthest at the back point of the station in a kind of horseshoe shape, so that the two horseshoe ends did come around and there was a hallway that connected them so they kind of formed a horseshoe shape…

They led us down the horseshoe, and as we walked around we're calling out names and pointing into the individual barracks for the squads which were 16 all the way around. There were alpha, bravo, charlie, delta, all the way around, and went down. They were calling out "so and so alpha", "so and so bravo." We get to delta and it was me and another guy. It was like, Cramer, Hansen, Delta Squad. So we went in there and they said wait here for the rest of your team to get back, and you'll get briefed by them and told what to do. I could go into [great] detail into these sorts of things, but long story short, the rest of the squad came back. We met, familiarized ourselves, all realized that we were going to have to be friends, and that was the first day I got to meet my squad and realize what was going to happen.
[42.32]
The next day was our first training day where we got to familiarize ourselves with the powered body armor, environment suits and the hand-held gauss rifles or magnetic propelled weapons, and practiced our simulations putting on and taking off our body armor, firing weapons, and shooting against what were supposedly known threats at the time. Got a briefing from the base intel officer on where we were, and what we were doing, what the threats were going to be… He explained to us the Mars Colony Corporations job is to extract minerals and resources that those folks do, and your job is to kill anything that tries to get in the way of that.
[43.27]
We were informed that the native species of Mars were numerous as it turns out. There's a number of living things that live on Mars now. The surface is still kind of sparse compared to what it used to be before the grand accident, as I kind of think of it. Which at another place in the story it will be more appropriate to tell that part, talking about the history of Mars as I've come to understand it, or came to be told it. So we were given a briefing on who and what's what. So it turns out there were two main evolved species other than us who were living on this planet that we might have to contend with.

A native Reptoid species and a native Insectoid species that don't necessarily live in the same areas, but have their own nests and hives, whatever they wanted to call them at the time.
[44.28]
We were essentially treated to the typical [briefing], these are the native savages and beasts that you're going to have to deal with. We weren't given any kind of impression that these evolved or civilized cultures, or had high knowledge, or philosophy, or technology or anything. Just that these tended to be a really big pain in the butt that we were going to have to deal with. I learned later that that was not the case. These were a very evolved species, had quite a bit of intelligence, quite a bit of culture, quite a bit of civilization. We were not given that as a briefing.
[44.28]
We were explained what the main tactic and strategy of Mars was, and the way these beings worked on Mars was a constant testing of boundaries. Wherever your boundaries meet up against, a forward station meets up with the boundary of a Reptoid or Instectoid species, lair or hive, is going to be a place of contested space, where they will challenge that space. They will challenge that space as far as to raid and completely overwhelm your own hive or nest, as they like to call it. But they have a strategy, which is you don't go in and completely eliminate somebody's nest, you don't kill everything inside the nest. If you actually get inside somebody's hive or nest; or in our case our base, your goal is to kill all the soldiers, or kill all the army ants so to speak, or you kill, or break all the eggs in the hatchery, the next fringe generation of warriors. You're not trying to eliminate or knock out the species since that would create a vacuum of space, and you don't know necessarily what's going to come in and occupy that neighboring space again because most of everyone is fairly contained where they're at.
There's not a lot of a need to have a hive or nest to expand there, or there and there. There's a lot of isolationist, we're OK here [sentiment]. You stay where you are, and we'll occasionally test your area, and test your space, and we'll occasionally reduce your level to be a threat to us by stomping on all your eggs, or by stomping on all your soldiers so you have to breed or grow a bunch more. That maintains a certain balance of safety, and a certain balance of "we can all grow and get along without anyone having to get too crazy or out of line." It keeps everyone in a constant state of war and conflict, and threat, and attack and defense. Our main strategy, as we were told, was to defend those borders, and to occasionally raid somebody else's nest and follow those same conditions. If we raided … somebody's lair or nest we were not expected to wipe them out with every technology we had. We were supposed to do the same thing which is to stomp on the eggs, or step on all the little hatchlings, and set them back a couple of generations long enough [so] that it will be x number of months or whatever before they are going to be able to formulate any kind of offensive again.

We were informed that that was the way it was going to be and we were going to be spending quite a bit of time doing that. After the intel briefing on here's where you are, here's who you are fighting, and here's where you're going to be fighting it, we got a speech from the old man, the colonel of the base. A nice old guy, I mean a guy I still respect to this day quite a bit, who gave us his big speech on who we are, why we're here. To be honest, it was a fairly motivating speech. He said a lot of positive things about who we are, and why we were there, what good we were doing there for our people on our planet back home, and why we should be proud of what we're doing and where we are. Again, it was a good speech, I felt fairly motivated by it. So after we got everybody's introduction speeches, then like I said, the next day it was straight … [unintelligible] figuring out how to work all the equipment … We probably had our first skirmish by the fifth day I was there.

[48.52]

M.S. You mentioned that the Reptoid and Insectoid races that were there were indigenous. I'm assuming that they don't have anything to do with off-world Reptoid and Insectoid races that do have advanced spacecraft that travel through our galaxy, and have been reported to be interacting with people on Earth. That these indigenous Martian Reptoid and Insectoid races are some kind of indigenous development over many, many millennia.

[49.26]
R.C. Yes, definitely, at that point I can go into a little more detail into what I understand to be the Martian history as it was told to me. I have to jump a bit ahead I guess otherwise it will be this very long story. So I'll just jump ahead into this really interesting part. Some years later, well into my second decade of my service … at the time I had gone from being a plebe in a fire team, to the squad leader of Delta Squad and we were captured, intentionally by the Reptoid species who referred to themselves as the Gah Luka [phonetic] which is as much as we think of ourselves as Earthlings because we live on Earth, Gah Luk is the name they call their planet, their home, so they really just call themselves people of home, the children of Gah Luka.
[50.42]
When we got captured, which remember was intentional, they decided that they had enough of whatever game playing we'd been doing over these years and it was time to get closer to who this hairless pink ape was that had landed and was giving them trouble. Again, they're not savages. They're very, very intelligent. In fact, they're the remnants of the older ancient Martian species which was very advanced and had really advanced technology and space travel technologies. Advanced enough that they nearly destroyed themselves when they blew out their atmosphere. When the atmosphere got blown out, that essentially changed the pressure balance…. The pressure change made the oceans boil, and made the high pressure, low pressure systems so fast that 800 mph winds [blew]. While all of that air and moisture pushed out away from the planet and then gravity trying to pull it back in, some number of hours or days … was [all] that it took for the atmosphere [to] restabilize and create another bubble around it. By that time, everything had swirled around and thousand mph winds for who knows for how long, destroying every living thing on the surface.
If they had not already taken serious effort to have very deep and strong, completely secure, hundreds of feet underground, bases or cities of their own, they would never have survived because everything on the surface was absolutely annihilated. My understanding of what happened at that point is the surviving Reptoids who were all underground at that point, there was a moment of realization and awakening for them to go “wow, we just killed our planet.” That was not very cool of us…. There was pretty much a division, and I won’t say right down the middle. There was two sides that formed out of this. There was those who said, “wow, we’ve done a bad thing and we’re going to have to pay our penance for this, and we’re going to have to stay here and fix this. We are going to have to stay here and heal our planet, and re-terraform our planet… If it takes the next ten, twenty, whatever thousand years, well that’s our responsibility and what we are going to have to do in order to fix what we’ve done which is actually kill everything on the surface of the planet.”

[53.22]
The other faction was, “hell no, we’re getting out of here. Everything is dead, it’s gone, goodbye, it’s over. We might as well leave.” They picked up and left. It’s entirely possible or even likely that some of them came here [Earth], and that … one of the many species of Reptoids that came here ten or twenty thousand years ago that may or may not be friendly, giving us some trouble, certainly could have been some of those Martian Reptoids who left when that happened. I’m pretty sure it wasn’t only them, and I’m pretty sure there’s more species that have done more harm to us than they have. But if anything, they could be one of those mid-level management illuminati type species, or something that could be here on Earth, that could be an answer for that.
[54.25]
But the ones that stayed, really changed their ways to be honest. The sort of difference between the northern tribes and the southern tribes, as they are known now, is that the southern tribe have decided that to appease their planet that they should return to the old ways. So much of their choice to fight with primitive weaponry, or to fight using more primitive warlike techniques is a very specific stance on their part to do what they think, which is to be true to the old ways of their world and of their planet in order to have this old warrior philosophy, and this old way of living, than having war, since obviously the new way got everybody killed… So their philosophy is Luddite, “let’s go back, forward was bad, so let’s go back, that’s the way we should fix this.” So the southern tribes, I wouldn’t say they’re the friendliest or really the folks there that we would want to try and make good relationships with, or have positive relationships with, because they’re not interested in it. They are interested in a life of war, that’s what they do and they believe that’s being true to their planet, and their true being is to be warlike.

The northern tribes are a little more varied, a little more different, and in some cases more mystical, more spiritual … and so when we were captured it was to get to the bottom of who we were and what was going on in our heads so that they could decide whether to wipe out this interloper that had come, this invasive species. Or whether it was something that should cohabitate and learn from this experience on their world as well. It was through a kind of lengthy process, a pretty painful torturous process, they weren’t nice about it at first. They were really wanting to get to the bottom of it. So there were a number of days where I was hung up with my arms, like this, in a stress position, being asked questions for a number of days before being let down, and allowed to mingle with the community and given a chance to participate as a member of the group. I felt really blessed, given that opportunity, and got to spend enough time to learn quite a bit, and in that period of time was also taken by a leader of that Reptoid tribe to meet the Insectoid tribe, and got to meet them for the first time through the Saurians, as a liaison, as a go-between. That was really interesting.
[57.13]
The Insectoids were essentially a subterranean species who were coming along as far as higher intelligence, and their ability to manipulate their own biology, and ability to organically grow and hatch things the way they wanted to. They were very advanced for an insect species that don’t use any kind of electronic technology … we were surprised at the kind of thing that can be accomplished. Essentially, when the Reptoids were driven underground by the surface being destroyed, that allowed in the time of re-terraforming the surface, the opportunity for the insects to come to the surface and they started building large hives out on the surface to expand. The fact that the Reptoids nearly annihilated themselves is what allowed it [Mars] to become a two species planet…. This other species was able to sort of come out, secure some space; and according to the Reptoids own system of what they believe are laws [of] how their planet works, the insects could defend and maintain their space by playing with the same rules of respect and strength, then it was OK. They could set out their space and they could all cohabitate together, and still have the occasional skirmish or invasion of one another since that's what you do sometimes.

There was also interestingly quite a good peace treaty between most of the northern tribes and the insects. The insects and the northern tribes didn't fight much. They really had their shit together. Anyway, I could blah blah about that, but I'll let you ask another question or go on.

[59.05]

M.S. Essentially, your primary responsibility when stationed at Forward Station Zebra was to participate in any Martian surface hostilities and to protect the Mars Colony Corporation, the different outposts they had there. I guess this may be what happened later, was there off world battles that you were a part of, or you knew were occurring and this was something you would support in some way, or later on became directly active in?

[R.C.]To my knowledge at the time, we weren't given a lot of details in our daily briefings on what was happening outside of the Martian surface, or what was happening too far outside of our zone. We even didn't get reports on what was happening at the other stations, or what was happening with the other settlements. We got really limited information on what was happening in our zone, and our area that our forward station was responsible for. We got the impression from everything else that was going on, that there was also a battle happening in the skies, with certain peoples. We couldn't necessarily have a lot of information of who was fighting or shooting at who. I guess I should say this, the conflict itself, we didn't understand who everybody was in this game, because while there were a native Reptoid species, and a native Insectoid species, and us, there also was an invasive Reptoid species which for several years we did not understand was separate from the native species.

[1:01.03]
For a number of years we just assumed that a reptile was a reptile was a reptile, and they were all part of the same group, even if they were different in size, shape or color. They just must be different kinds of ranks, or distinctions, or individual races, that they are working with. We presumed for a long time that all the reptiles were the same, and they weren't. There was an invasive Reptoid species, they were Draconians, Alpha Draconians. For a long time we thought the two reptiles were the same. The Draconians were really trying to play off, getting everyone else to fight with each other. So the more hostility, the more crazy action, they could encourage us to take against each other, the native saurian, the native insects, and us, was good for them. It took quite a bit of time to realize through good intelligence that was not the case, and we needed to sort of rethink what was happening. Our goal definitely was to defend everything and anything that threatened, but I just want to make the distinction that what we thought that was, wasn't exactly what that was. It was partly because of bad intelligence, and partly because of species ignorance, like they all have the same thing … [without realizing] they were two completely different species.
[1:02.39]
We didn't know that the native reptiles and the invasive reptiles were fighting, and the insects and the invasive reptiles were fighting, and trying to get us to fight with each other, to keep us from fighting them. We didn't realize that if we were under attack from the air, it wasn't the same reptiles that were trying to attack us from underground, across the sand. So it was pretty confusing for while, as far as who was doing what, and what was fighting. Day to day operations was that if anything comes close, suit up, go out, fight with it. If anything comes to raid or invade, go through the protocols of defending the space until it's over, then do the same thing the next day if you have to.
[1:03.23]
M.S. There have been a number of sources that have described a human indigenous race on Mars that historically, at a time of devastation, that it's possible that they emigrated to the Earth, and some of them went underground. Did you ever come across any kind of evidence, or any information about an indigenous human looking Martian race?

[1:03.49]
RC. Not an indigenous one. It was explained to me that many different species have touched the surface of Mars over the years. Just like many species have touched the surface of the Earth over the years. So Mars is no exception to that. They certainly had a number of other Reptoid, Mammalian and other types of species that have come there, hung out for a while, stayed for a while, had conflict, then left. There were certainly times when the native Reptoids were not as advanced … [inaudible] add technology, help them, hinder them, use them … they've had kind of the same story but in their own unique way that we have in that way.
[1:04.46]
M.S. So you're stationed at [Forward] Station Zebra for 17 years and you're doing all this fighting, suiting up to do battle with whoever is threating the Mars Colony or Aires Prime or other settlements, in your down time, what did you do for recreation. Did you travel to Aries Prime, and just hung out? What was happening in the down time?
R.C. Oh, sure, we never left the station ever, unless it was military related, we had to go out to defend something, and come back. We never left. All our down time and recreation time was spent in the horseshoe pretty much. Luckily, there were the simulators which we used for training, could also be used for recreation. They're essentially a kind of holographic experiential system that you hook into. There's headgear, and a kind of body thing that you sit into, and you engage in this completely virtual experience that has the ability because it's completely hooked into your central nervous system, to train muscle memory at the same time. So we actually did a lot of training in the simulators in which going through the virtual simulated experiences are actually doing all the same messaging, electro, bioelectrically through our bodies, at least doing the same training as muscle memory. The weight of information that is transmitted in the simulators, is faster than real time. So you can actually do 12 hours of training in a simulator, in three hours of actual time. So those same simulators are also used for recreation. OK, so where do we want to go today? Let's go hang out on the beach. Ok, let's go hang out at the beach. You plug into the simulator and hang out at the beach for the afternoon.

M.S. I see, so for example female companionship, were females allowed on the station, or was it using these simulators?
[1:07.10]
R.C. It was absolutely mixed co-ed group. Men and women were assigned to the special tactical operations division there. Again, I would say in the supersoldier categories you still had this kind of two thirds, almost male, to a third female ratio. There definitely were more men than there were women, but in order to deal with that, in order to deal with what otherwise would have been a pretty competitive situation, the rules and regulations were pretty much set up for a very liberal approach to soldiers having sex with each other, both hetero and homoerotic in ways that were considered as long as it's in your off-time, and it's in such a way, do whatever you need to do to get your hormones out of the way. Otherwise there were too many fights and people were knocking each other out in the hallways over things that didn't really matter. So it was a very liberal policy towards interaction. A very liberal policy towards sexual interaction and in your off-time you could pretty much do what you want. We did have a mixed bunch.
[1:08.32]
M.S. After spending 17 years on Forward Station Zebra what rank did you attain, what responsibilities did you have, and what happened that precipitated the next transition in your own off-world activities.
[1:08.53]
R.C. I'm realizing that the question you asked me earlier I didn't get to finish, [I can finish] by answering this question. In my capacity in special tactical operations division, I moved all the way up to Sergeant-Major after a 17 year 3 month period of time. Just a little over 17 years. At that time, a horrible disaster occurred. I'm going to have to choose my words carefully here. It wasn't an accident, it wasn't a natural disaster, but suffice to say that my division 098, our sister division 097, and two other divisions from a neighboring station 096 and 095, which is about 244 per division. 16 squads of 16 persons each which I think is 244 [actually 254] times four, nearly, just under a thousand of us. When it was over, out of that thousand, there were less than 35, [of] which I was a surviving member. It was a really bad thing which everyone got killed. At that point, it was over, the division was done. If they were going to rebuild the division, they were going to have to rebuild from scratch. There was no way you were going to take the six or seven guys out of the division that was left and watch the entire rest of the division get massacred, and put them back in, and be a part of the next division. That just wasn't going to happen. [1:10.57]

I had a superior officer who came to me when I was in my Med-bed recovering, and asked me if I wanted to go to a flight school and fly. I didn't have to bat an eye. I was like of course I want to fly. He said, "great, as soon as you're done here, the docs clear you here, we're going to send you off to OCS [Officer Candidate School] Officer School, and you get to go fly. The last almost three years of my time, in my 20 year tour, I got to spend as a pilot, an officer, as a captain. At that point [OCS] was still in a marine air corps division … The Air Corps division interestingly enough, I think was modelled after a US Air Force program but contained a number of pilots and officers from other branches of the military. While we all got to wear the same uniform, we had distinctive ribbons and patches that identified exactly which service and country we were from. Unlike what it was like on the ground. On the ground we all had a completely different uniform, an MDF uniform, that didn't have any of that insignia or marking on it. But when we moved to the flight division, that was different. We were more clearly identified as where we were from, and from what country we were from so that everyone… It was way more of an international mixing together. So that's to answer the question about things that were happening in the air. Yeh, that last few years I got to spend in the air, in various skirmishes around the solar system, and doing a few interesting things in that capacity, Including the bombing of the Zeta base on Ganymede, which to my knowledge, our problems with the Zetas ended when we bombed the f. out of their base on Ganymede.

M.S. I was going to leave questions about the last three years of your service for another part, a final concluding part, but I wanted to finish this part by finding out [about] this final battle where your division was wiped out with approximately a thousand casualties. Firstly what did that battle involve, was it the indigenous races there on Mars? Finally, what was the fall-out for the Mars Colony Corporation, were the Corporations activities destroyed, or inhibited by what happened to the Mars Defense Force.
[1:13.51]
R.C. All very good questions. Essentially at this time, just before this mission occurred, the war was over. A war which I had spent 17 years as a part of, but had started way before I did. My understanding, [it] raged for over 25 years. That was over, we had actually signed treaties with the native Reptoids and the native Insectoids, and had recognized the invading Reptoids [Draconians] as the bad guys, and had all got together and signed a treaty. [We] ganged up on them [Draconians], three against one, and drove them completely out of the Martian sphere for good. That was huge, that was a big applause moment and we essentially got told, “OK, we need you guys to go in to this Reptoid Hive which was supposed to be a much older, older site that had artifacts that are really old, that the scientists want.” [It] was not uncommon for them to find some area or ruin that had some old archeological facets, technologies that they would send us in to try and extract or get. Sometimes it would be just junk, and sometimes some interesting weird stuff. Sometimes it would be, oh, crap, there’s a nest of them here, and we’d run away, because we didn’t bring enough guys.
We ended the war and instead of ending the war, they were like, OK, go get this thing at this site and we are sending four divisions, a thousand of you. Which is pretty weird to send a thousand guys on a go pick-up an object kind of mission. Most of us thought that was pretty weird and most of us had a bad feeling about what we were doing. We thought “wait, wait, wait, we don’t want this to be misinterpreted. We signed a treaty with these guys and we ganged up on the real bad guys with these guys, do we really want to risk [that] by sending a thousand guys to one of their older, more ancient temple sites that they’ve asked us not to go into? They’re not going to receive that very well.” Some of us were concerned. I certainly being a senior enlisted person protested to my command officer, to the command staff, and I protested to the old man [the commanding Colonel], used whatever weight I carried with him to say, “look, look, I don’t think this is a good idea. I think this is dirty, I don’t think we are going to make out with this, and we should know better that meeting these guys in the field, that they hold back, nine times out of ten. If they really come at us mad, we’re done. They’re really powerful warriors and most of the time they really fight restrained because if they really came at us with barrels it would be all over quickly. It’s no fun for them in that way.” Knowing that, I was not interested in walking into whatever we were walking into. But the old man really agreed with me, that he didn’t like it either. He said, “I got my orders, now you got yours, and do what I know you do best and get in there, get your job done and get out. If there’s a problem, get out. I trust you to command your people, and I trust you to be a top guy down there on the ground, and I … can’t be there which is why you’re going to be there, and that’s why I hope this is going to go as badly as I think it will either. But, we all got our orders, so go do it.”

RC. We essentially had to come at this large underground ancient site through a series of tunnels and caves that kind of went down to it. We didn’t want to send everyone through one direction, plus that would have bottled us up in the smaller caverns we couldn’t fit more than six or eight guys across. You got a thousand guys, that makes crowded hallways. We try to keep … directions as we could. Sure enough, we get into this main domed building area which is essentially like standing inside something the size of the superdome or the astrodome or whatever. Some kind of domed sports arena. It was just that big and that round or so. We all kind of got down inside and we’re trying to communicate with HQ to figure out what’s next, and that’s when all the communications went dead, and our radios and our signals were jammed, and we all started looking at each other going this can't be good. Then all round this large domed roof, at even intervals, what appeared to be rocky surface became doorways. I'm not sure if that was a solid holographic, or not a solid holographic, or what looked like solid wall, was all of a sudden not solid wall, and was doorways going all the way round this room. Like streams coming out of a drainpipe, from each hole come floods of these very large, very mean, very angry Martian [Reptoid] warriors, swaying around in both hands large bladed weapons. They just started moving around and surrounding everybody and moving in a big circle, a spiral, and swinging. An outer circle of all of our people just starting dropping and being cut, [we] tried to pull in, and pull in, try to get some distance to try to manage to fight and defend. No, it was like being caught inside a blender.

By that stage we, the egg heads, had developed a localized wormhole technology so a lot of our transporting of troops at that stage in the game, was being done by a localized wormhole phenomenon. But they [Reptoids] had completely jammed out ability to communicate, were jamming our ability to send localized troop transport coordinates … Someone managed to get their radio going correctly, or managed to get another signal on another frequency so they were able to connect to HQ, and try and communicate what was going on, and what we should do, what was happening. They kept telling us to stay put, not like we could do anything else, and any minute now they would have figured out how to get the wormholes back open and get us out of there.
Well what happened was the craft that uses the localized wormhole phenomenon [was jammed] so they had to use the larger ship transport wormhole phenomenon which created this large ship sized wormhole right above us. [It] sucked up the survivors, what was left at that point. The circle kept getting smaller and smaller, and then whoever got caught in the event horizon of that ship wormhole was sliced right off wherever they touched the event horizon. The next thing I know we're on the Med-bay pad and medics coming in … [Randy gets very emotional] I can see her top half, blood coming out of her so fast that she went pale so fast, and lifeless so fast. All I could do was yell, “medic, medic, I need a medic over here. I got people dying.” It was chaos, and everybody died except the 35 or so of us that didn’t. My understanding was that this was a dumb command decision by people at the MCC who wanted whatever this thing that was so special … they were willing to violate treaty space, [what] we had already decided was treaty space, by sending a thousand guys to their death.

To my knowledge I think the MCC really suffered from that. I don’t think the native Martians would have chosen at that point to say, “you betrayed it, we’re going to wipe you out now.” I think they would have said, “well, we killed all your guys who came into our temple, like we told you not to. That will teach you that lesson.” I would imagine that anyone else who thought … [inaudible] a harsh response from them at that point. They essentially … [inaudible] parameters of the treaty. I seriously doubt that would degrade back into war based on the treaty we filed, but it would be seen as an overstep that was responded with, “well your guys came over here like they shouldn’t and we killed them all like we told you we would if you did. Don’t do it again.”
[1:23.56]
M.S. Well thanks for sharing that. I think a lot of the listeners would appreciate knowing exactly what it was that happened, even though the details are obviously a very moving and traumatic for you, a lot of viewers would benefit to know what exactly happened, and what the ramifications were. So I’m going to bring this part to a close, and then we will come back for another part to look at the final three years and wrap things up. I want to thank you Captain Kaye, and we’ll be back soon.

Whistleblowers reveal breathable air on Mars & secret corporate bases

Today a transcript was released of an interview featuring Randy Cramer (aka Captain Kaye) who claims to have spent 17 years on Mars in the initial phase of a 20 year tour of duty from 1987 to 2007 with a secret space program. The transcript of the interview conducted on April 8, 2014, makes it possible to more easily compare Cramer's claims with that of another more recent whistleblower, Corey Goode (aka GoodETxSG), who also says he spent time at secret bases established on Mars during his own 20 year tour of duty over the same time period with another secret space program. A comparison of their testimonies shows consistency in their respective claims of secret bases on Mars run by corporations. Most surprising is that their claims of Mars having a breathable atmosphere hospitable to small animal life and vegetation, is supported by NASA's own Mars orbiter and rover images.

According to Cramer, the first landing on Mars occurred in the mid 1960's, and led to further exploratory missions before the establishment of a mining operation around 1975 that was run by what he described as the "Mars Colony Corporation":

My understanding is that we were on Mars the very first time around the mid-60s, but really didn't try to do anything serious, or really prepared to do anything with that until the 1970s. My understanding is that our first exploratory mission that was sent there to stay any length of time was 1970. Then after a few years it was decided that we were ready to go ahead and establish a Mars Colony Corporation foothold, and set up a few settlements and attempt to do some mining, and extract some resources to make it pay for itself. Apparently that was about 1975, when the Mars Colony Corporation set foot on Mars and started its first mining operation.

The military force that Cramer claims to have served under, the "Mars Defense Force," he says is controlled by the Mars Colony Corporation, and not any regular military space program run by the US or any multinational alliance.

If Cramer is accurate, the situation on Mars is therefore analogous to the scene depicted in the movie Avatar – a corporate conglomerate runs mining operations on a moon, Pandora, using contracted military personnel as its own private army. The way Cramer and his division was told to treat the native Martian inhabitants who used minimal advanced technology, again was very similar to Pandora. The native Martians would be attacked if they interfered in any way with the mining operations of the Mars Colony Corporation.

Corey Goode claims that one of five secret space programs he was exposed to during his tour of service is run by an Interstellar Corporate Conglomerate (ICC). He describes it as follows:

Focused mainly on development and aquisition of technology by any means. Develop and Produce Technology for Commerce with Earth and Off World Groups in a Barter System and left nothing off the table that they were willing to trade. Very powerful, very classified, and always had all of the latest technology and “Toys” at their disposal.

The ICC came into existence around the same time as Cramer claims the Mars Colony Corporation emerged in the mid-1970s. Goode explains how the ICC controls military forces on Mars just as Cramer described the situation with the Mars Defense Force and the Mars Colony Corporation. While the terminology used by Cramer and Goode to describe the corporate entity running Mars differs, the way the corporate entity functions is very similar.

The security personnel that are assigned to Mars serve under corporate leadership according to both Cramer and Goode. The military groups that will be returning to their previous organizations (secret space programs) are kept isolated from the population and personnel who live and work on the corporate colonies, bases and industrial facilities that they protect. In a June 22 report of a recent inspection tour of a Mars corporate facility, Goode describes how the Interplanetary Corporate Conglomerate had its own security personnel running the base in a manner similar to a draconian police state.

The emergence of private companies to take over significant aspects of secret space programs is a logical development of the secrecy surrounding these programs. The massive funding necessary for establishing and maintaining off-planet space programs cannot come from the normal appropriations process used by the US and other national militaries. The latter have to answer to lawmakers in their funding requests, and typically have to deal with public scrutiny of their “official black budget” funding of classified programs through the Department of Defense. In 2013, Edward Snowden released NSA files revealing that the black budget used to fund the intelligence community and classified programs was $52.16 billion for fiscal 2013. The large scale funding required for establishing bases on Mars, or other celestial bodies, would far exceed the $52 billion “official black budget,” and require going outside the normal Congressional funding process to maintain secrecy, at least in the USA. A 2003 report revealed a second “unofficial black budget” and estimated it to be an astounding average of $1.7 trillion per year from 1998-2000, At the time, that was more than five times the entire budget for the Department of Defense which in 2001 was $291 billion. The “unofficial black budget” is almost certainly likely used to fund secret off-world programs such as Mars, the moon and elsewhere.

Companies taking over various aspects of secret space programs could do so without legislative scrutiny and oversight. As long as the companies controlling mining and other aspects of secret space programs could make profits on such activities, then stock holders would be unlikely to pose any long term problem. If Corey Goode’s testimony about the existence of the Interplanetary Corporate Conglomerate is accurate, then it appears that many classified space activities and assets are already being exploited for profit.

The most significant similarity between Cramer’s and Goode’s testimonies concerns the Martian atmosphere. According to Cramer, when he landed on Mars, he exited and directly experienced the Martian atmosphere:

It was that particular time that we came out, it was, it felt like a hot day but there was a very cold wind that was blowing and you felt like you came out at 8000 or 9000 feet or something like that. The air was very thin, but totally breathable. I was really quite surprised to be honest, to have them just open up the door and say alright head for that other door and have us walk right outside but we did.

This is what Corey Goode says about his experience on Mars:

There is a thin atmosphere (like being at very high altitudes on Earth) but the atmospheric pressure is very low as is the temperature most of the time. There are times depending on Mars season and weather that make it possible for very short exposure time on the surface…. I would imagine that some have slightly acclimated to it. I would not want to spend any amount of time outside of the light duty suits we wore especially if you were doing anything physically exertive. There were some small wild life and vegetation that we observed in the general location of where the construction was being done.

According to NASA, Mars atmosphere is 95% carbon dioxide with only a trace amount of oxygen 0.13% – not enough to sustain life. On October 14, 2014, NASA's MAVEN spacecraft, released data about oxygen being released from Mars upper atmosphere into space. According to NASA, this oxygen is due to the breakdown of water and carbon dioxide molecules in the upper atmosphere. Another explanation is that oxygen is being produced on Mars surface by vegetation that varies in size with the seasons, and whose oxygen eventually dissipates as it rises.

Source: NASA JPL. MAVEN Imaging Ultraviolet Spectrograph

Dr Thomas Van Flandern former Chief Astronomer for the United States Naval Observatory released his research findings about photos from the Mars Global Surveyor spacecraft that there was current vegetation on Mars in the form of shrubs, and trees that varies with seasons. In an April 5, 2001 Press Conference at the National Press Club, Washington DC., he presented his evidence of vegetation on Mars along with his analysis of evidence of artificial structures.

Image Source: Mars Anomaly Research

Van Flandern also revealed the strong opposition to him publishing his findings in peer reviewed scientific journals – a clear way to minimize the ground breaking results that there was photographic evidence of life on Mars. Despite Van Flandern's professional standing in the astronomical community, NASA and the scientific community ignored his pioneering research revealing vegetation on Mars that fluctuated with seasons.

There have been a number of Curiosity Rover images that appear to show small animals on the surface of Mars such as lizards, squirrels and even ducks which helps confirm Goode's claims of small wild life and vegetation. The Curiosity Rover images support Cramer's and Goode's claims that Mars has a thin breathable atmosphere. Perhaps, most importantly, their testimonies and Curiosity Rover images confirm that Mars surface is producing oxygen, whose levels fluctuate with the seasons. The oxygen eventually finds its way into the upper atmosphere before being dissipated into space. The oxygen observed by the MAVEN spacecraft is therefore not exclusively a result of the breakdown of water and carbon dioxide, but also due to Mars fluctuating surface oxygen levels.

Another significant aspect of Cramer's testimony is his claim that Martian sunsets and sunrises are purple, while the daytime sky is normally red due to the heavy amount of iron oxide in the atmosphere which blocks shorter wavelengths such as blue. Here's what he said about the Mars sunset:

> … there's a period of time for maybe 15 or 20 minutes depending on the season when the sun is dropping below the horizon and it goes from red to purple. For about 15 mins everything turns this amazing shade of purple.

Again, this matches with Goode's experiences on Mars.

> The sky was a light blue to lavender and pinkish especially during sunset when there wasn't a lot of dust in the upper atmosphere (which occurred frequently when we were on the surface).

On May 15, Curiosity Rover made headlines by releasing its first color photos of the Martian sunset. While NASA and the media described these as blue sunsets, as one can easily see in the following video, the overall sky during the sunset takes a progressively purplish tinge as the sun continues to dip towards the horizon. This is similar to what Cramer and Goode claimed, and helps corroborate their testimonies.

To date, there has been no hard evidence or documentation to substantiate Randy Cramer's claims. In his interviews he appears sincere, consistent, and attentive to details in the experiences he is describing. Furthermore, his testimony has similarities with other Mars whistleblowers who have come forward such as Michael Relfe and Corey Goode. In particular, the similarities with Relfe's and Goode's testimonies suggest that one or more secret space programs exist where personnel are recruited for 20 year tours of duty, before being returned to normal civilian life through age-regression and time travel technologies with their memories removed.

It's highly unlikely that Cramer is making up his testimony, but there is a possibility that some of his "recovered memories" are implanted screen memories designed to mislead him and others about various aspects of secret space programs. It's possible that genuine information is mixed with false screen memories in Cramer's revelations about secret bases on Mars. This is certainly what I believed about Cramer's bizarre claim of having experienced two head transplants while serving on Mars, until I learned that such a medical procedure is viable and will be soon attempted.

In the absence of hard evidence or documentation to confirm Cramer's testimony, detailed analysis of his claims such as the color of Martian sunsets/sunrises and a thin breathable Martian atmosphere with scientific data will be helpful. Finally, a cross-comparative study with the claims of other secret space program whistleblowers such as Goode and Relfe, will further help confirm his claims. An earlier comparison with the claims of Goode, showed that there was no possibility of cross contamination, and that their testimonies were genuinely independent. Combining scientific analyses with comparative studies of Cramer's and other whistleblower testimonies will help reveal the reveal the truth about secret bases on Mars.

Mission to Mars investigates claims of slave labor at secret corporate base

Corey Goode today released a report about an inspection tour he claims was held on Mars on June 20 that he attended along with others from a Secret Space Program Alliance. He describes how he was first picked up from his home by a blue/indigo sphere that belongs to a group of advanced extraterrestrial visitors called the “Sphere Being Alliance”, which have appointed him to be their delegate at all meetings involving Earth’s secret space programs. The sphere took Goode to a secret base on the moon called Lunar Operations Command where he met with a Lt Colonel Gonzales, the delegate representing a Secret Space Program Alliance wanting to fully disclose to the world the truth about extraterrestrial life and advanced technologies.

Goode describes how he and Gonzales were each assigned a security team of two Intuitive Empath (IE) assistants (a position Goode previously held for 20 years when he served in the Solar Warden Space program from 1987 to 2007). Goode and Gonzales were accompanied on the trip to Mars by a representative of the Interplanetary Corporate Conglomerate (ICC). The ICC evolved out of a consortium of companies such as Lockheed Martin, Northrup Grumman, Boeing Corporations etc., that create the advanced technologies used by the five secret space programs that emerged in the post-World War 2 era.

Goode says that the trip took 30 minutes which is longer than the few minutes it normally takes to travel to Mars since it is currently on the opposite side of the sun. The total current distance is approximately 250 million miles apart (~420 million km) which means that Goode’s transport shuttle averaged a staggering ¾ the speed of light. Conventional rocket propelled craft would take up to 260 days to make the same journey.

What immediately caught my attention was what Goode said about the roof of the shuttle craft as it left the LOC:

As we lifted off and flew through the bay doors that opened we could see the surface of the moon grow distant quickly and then the earth through the transparent panels in the walls of the vessel. We then went to speed and the panels changed to an opaque color.

This is very similar to what Randy Cramer (aka Captain Kaye) described seeing when he was first taken to Mars by a shuttle from Lunar Operations Command back in 1987:
Interestingly enough, the feeling inside the vehicle when he pulled out of the hangar bay and positioned himself at whatever distance he was from the earth, whatever perfect distance they wanted so that when the visual array came on, and the ceilings became a projection of what the vehicle was seeing in front of it. … You really had a sense that we were all hovering in space in these chairs, staring out at Earth, getting our big look for the last time, and it was awe-inspiring. It absolutely stands out as one of the most amazing moments in my entire life.
Goode describes the terms that had been agreed to between the representatives of the ICC and the Secret Space Program Alliance Council for what would happen once they reached Mars:
Gonzales again told the ICC Representative that we appreciated them agreeing to the terms of allowing us to bring the armed security, choosing the site of the conference once in orbit, the tours and allowing us to bring one family of our choosing back with us to question and to either provide sanctuary to or allow to return to their home colony depending on the families wishes. I sat and listened since I had not been a part of the negotiations and hoped to overhear something new from the process.
Upon arrival at Mars, Gonzales was given by the ICC representative a list of ICC facilities on Mars in the northern hemisphere that would be suitable for the base inspection. Gonzales instead requested a location in the southern hemisphere which greatly concerned the ICC representative who at first denied its existence. Gonzales insisted that the base existed according to fresh intelligence. The ICC then contacted his superiors and said it would take an hour to prepare the base for the inspection.
After arriving at the southern hemisphere base Goode described the instructions they were given of what they would be able to discuss with the base inhabitants:
The ICC representative then told us what the subject of that conversation was going to be. He was carefully watching our reactions as he gave us a summary of what to expect from the base commander. He stated that the people at this facility were here for generations and that they were under the impression for decades now that the earth had been through some sort of cataclysm and was no longer inhabitable. He said that we are being asked to not throw off the social dynamics of the facility by revealing that this was not the case or that any of us were from the surface of Earth.

Goode and Gonzales then met the base commander who told them the following about the primary mission of the facility which was described as a multi-decades social experiment:
As we entered, the base commander gave us the storyline about the people not knowing that the earth was still thriving and that this wasn't anything to do with any slavery theories being promoted by the SSP Alliance but was a complex "social experiment". It was stressed that we needed to be careful not to contaminate a multi-decades long experiment that will help humanity. I looked at Gonzales and he rolled his eyes at me as this was being said. The base commander then stated that the "main hall" was being setup for the conference and that we would be taken on a tour of the industrial plant first that was 8 kilometers away via an underground train. He said after the conference we would then tour the colony and meet the people, see their living conditions and ask a family if they would be willing to leave with us.
Goode then described how he inadvertently revealed that he was from Texas to one of the base security team who presumably had been told that the Earth's surface had been devastated in some cataclysm. This led to a growing commotion among the base's security team and led to their replacement:
It was at about this time that another monorail train arrived with many more security personnel. They told us to halt and they separated the security team that was with us, disarmed them and escorted them to the trains and left. A new security team was assigned to us and the ICC representative that obviously had an "ear wig" (communication device in his ear) told us that we were not to communicate with the security team unless it was to do with something security related.
Goode next describes how he, Gonzales and their security team were next taken to a large conference hall and saw many of the colonists and their leaders who made a presentation about the advanced technologies produced at the facility, and the exopolitical agreements that had been reached with up to 900 different extraterrestrial civilizations:

We were brought into the “main hall” that looked like an area that people are brought in for daily propaganda and there were a large number of ICC leadership members present who were bustling about as well and it was difficult to count how many were there. They sat us down and put on a “Dog and Pony Show” on a large “smart-glass screen” that showed all sorts of technologies that they produce, what they procure in trade for those technologies and stated that they had ongoing trade agreements with almost 900 civilizations and did occasional trade with far more than that. They showed all sorts of spacecraft and spacecraft components that some groups integrate into their own technologies and also discussed the exopolitical agreements they had made with groups that pass through our sector on a regular basis using the nearby natural portal systems that are a part of the “cosmic web”.

Goode then describes an incident that led to him, Gonzales and their security team being detained by the base commander. It began with the family that was chosen to accompany Goode and his companions back for a debriefing away from the facility:

It was now time for Gonzales to give the ICC representative the choice of the family we were to take back with us. He gave the number of a certain family’s dwelling that was an alpha numeric number outside their door and 15 minutes later a man, woman, teenage son and pre-teen daughter showed up with a small bag in each of their hands. They seemed kind of stoic and nervous. This was to be expected but they seemed off to me. .. When the door was closed Gonzales turned to the people and told them they were safe and that he would not betray their good faith. He said that “We know that there is another member of your family that is not present”, the father said “How could you know that?” Gonzales motioned to our security personnel and said that “our people have abilities”. The family then clammed up and would not talk. Gonzales became upset and said he would straighten this out and he and the two security personnel assigned to him left the vessel.

Goode says that the base commander became irate when challenged by Gonzales and was thrown into a detention cell, and was soon joined by Goode and his two man security team. Along the way, Goode described what he saw: “As we walked back through the rows of cells we saw quite a lot of people in various psychological stages of psychological distress locked up.”

Fearing the worst from the base commander that Gonzalez described as a “tyrant and a total megalomaniac,” Goode revealed how the blue/indigo spheres belonging to the Sphere Alliance rescued them:

It wasn’t a minute later that we saw our blue/indigo orb friends zipping through the walls of the cell, one for each of us. They danced around for a couple seconds and the other SSP personnel who had never traveled this way backed against the wall. Gonzales explained how the transportation works and then we each followed the SOP and were soon back at the LOC room where I was transported at the beginning of this journey.

Now safe at the Lunar Operations Command, Gonzales told Goode that mission had provided good intelligence about ICC operations on Mars:

He stated that the ICC’s goal was propaganda and that since the recent reports that were released to the public about the slave trade and labor going on by the ICC that they have been extremely upset and worked-up about information being public that was never supposed to be so.

The inspection of the Mars ICC facility described in Goode’s report helps confirm that slave labor conditions do indeed exist at these facilities where civilians are psychologically manipulated and physically abused by tyrannical base leaders who tolerate no dissent. The advanced technologies produced at these covert Mars facilities appear to be a valuable commodity in trade agreements with an extraordinarily high number of extraterrestrial civilizations – up to 900 if the ICC representative is correct.

The existence of secret bases on Mars and elsewhere in the solar system, controlled by a corporate conglomerate trading advanced technologies produced by human workers in slave labor conditions for interstellar trade is certainly a cause for great concern. There appears to be minimal accountability or oversight of such facilities and the base commanders running them.

To date Goode has not provided any hard evidence or documents supporting his extraordinary claims. Lt Col. Gonzales is yet to publicly come forward to confirm his participation or identity. There are however important similarities in the testimonies of Goode and Randy Cramer which helps confirm that a secret space program with bases on Mars does indeed exist. Goode has said that there are plans for future document dumps that will substantiate his claims. For now, Goode claims that his revelations will help the public prepare for the full extent of the shocking disclosures to come.

If Goode's testimony is accurate, as I believe it is, it is comforting to know that secret corporate bases on Mars and elsewhere are being investigated by a Secret Space Program Alliance that wants to disclose slave labor practices to the world, and launch trials against those responsible. It's only through a full disclosure of secret space programs that the people responsible for "crimes against humanity"can be exposed and brought to justice.

Corporate bases on Mars and Nazi infiltration of US Secret Space Program Part I

Secret Space Program whistleblower, “Corey” Goode (aka GoodETxSG), has revealed astounding details involving classified activities on Mars and the Moon. Most disturbing are his revelations about the influence of a secret NAZI breakaway civilization that successfully infiltrated the US national security system. His responses go into great detail of how secret space program activities in the US and globally, have been co-opted by unscrupulous forces and institutions that are denying humanity the benefits of the technological secrets acquired over the last century.

Corey released his latest information in response to a set of email questions sent to him on May 14. In previous Q & A email sessions, public forums and his website, Cory has released details of an alliance of five extraterrestrial races called the Sphere Alliance, three of whom he has had direct physical contact with at a number of meetings involving delegates from different secret space programs. At these diplomatic meetings, he claims to have interacted not only with representatives from different secret space programs, but also representatives of different extraterrestrial civilizations, 22 of which have contributed their genetics to the evolution of humanity.

The responses to the latest questions have been divided into two parts. Part one (see below) begins with Corey’s knowledge of what is happening on Mars. He claims to have personally traveled to Mars and describes witnessing a number of facilities which are owned by a space program called the Interplanetary Corporate Conglomerate (ICC). The condition of workers he saw at these ICC facilities made him suspect that they were being used as “slave labor.” Surprisingly, the Corporate Conglomerate has authority over military facilities that have also been built on Mars by other space programs. Corey’s response that a corporate entity essentially runs Mars using slave labor is quite disturbing.

Even more disturbing are his revelations about a secret Nazi Space Program that became operational during the Second World War despite the defeat of the Axis powers. The Nazis, according to Corey, escaped to secret bases in South America and Antarctica, where they established an alliance with a group of extraterrestrials called the Draco Reptilians. The Nazis were then able to successfully defeat a punitive military expedition by Admiral Byrd called Operation Highjump in 1947. Corey says that after a demonstration of Nazi technological superiority during the 1952 Washington UFO Flyover, both the Truman and Eisenhower administration negotiated agreements with the Nazi breakaway civilization. The Nazis then proceeded to infiltrate the U.S. national security system in ways that have undermined the independence and integrity of various US and international space programs, both civilian and military. Slave labor was a major practice in Nazi World War 2 industries, it appears that this continues with organizations that the Nazi breakaway civilization has infiltrated such as ICC operations on Mars.

The information Corey reveals is both astounding and deeply disturbing. For some it may appear too fantastic to believe. Yet, in my own due diligence of Corey's claims and credibility I have found nothing suggesting any intention to misrepresent or deceive on his part. He sincerely believes he is telling the truth about his past experiences working with different secret space programs. Other insiders have also vouched for Corey having participated in one or more secret space programs, suggesting that his claims, at the very least, deserve serious investigation.

Questions for Corey Goode on Mars, Moon and Nazi Space Program – May 14, 2015

[Questions sent on May 14. Answers received on May 19]

Q1. You have said that the Interplanetary Corporate Conglomerate (ICC) owns most of the Mars Bases. How many Mars bases do they own, and who owns the other bases on Mars?

The ICC has an entire industrial infrastructure that includes bases, stations, outposts, mining operations and facilities on Mars, various moons and spread throughout the main Asteroid Belt (where a "Super Earth Planet" once existed). They have facilities to take raw materials and turn them into usable materials to produce both complex metals and composite materials that our material sciences have not dreamt of

yet. They have separate groups of facilities that produce various types of technologies as well as each facility or plant that produces a specific component of a technology so that those working in the facilities and living in the support colonies/bases do not know exactly what they are producing. Much of the time the components are multiuse and are used in cross over projects. There are facilities on Earth that operate in much the same manner that contribute to the SSP on several levels.

There are other bases on Mars that are controlled by Military/Security groups as well as some scientific outposts. These can be owned and maintained by other SSP Programs but are usually going to report to the ICC on some level since the ICC controls much of the Air Space and Security Operations on and around Mars. Most of the security personnel that are assigned to Mars are assigned to and serve under the ICC. The military groups that will be returning to their previous organizations (SSP Groups) are kept isolated from the population and personnel who live and work on the Colonies, Bases and Industrial Facilities that they protect. They are normally in the rather Spartan outposts that I have described previously in other writings. I had seen a few of these outposts built from the “Ground Up”. They were always quite a distance from the main underground colonies, bases and industrial facilities and spread out in a Multi-Teared Perimeter Defensive type of system. There are “Non-Humans” also having bases on the planet. Some of them have been there for some time and have the highly coveted larger lava tube systems that have been built out into base systems that are unimaginably huge and can securely reside millions of inhabitants.

Q2. Did you ever spend time on any of the Mars bases? If so, what did you say, and how long did you spend there?

Yes, there were several occasions where there were specialty equipment malfunctions that needed to be repaired immediately. When the ICC was unable to arrange their personnel from Earth or other facilities in the Sol System to make a trip to a colony, base or industrial facility in the time needed a request was put through to the specialists on our scientific research vessel. On these rare occasions we would fly down to the location where we would be met by 4 to 6 armed guards. We would be instructed not to make eye contact or communicate with anyone for any reason unless it was directly related to the work we were there to do. In these situations there would normally be one of our security team, an Intuitive Empath, and a scientist and two technicians along with tools and parts that may be needed.

We would be escorted directly to the location of the work. The local facilities security team would watch us very closely and then escort us directly back to our shuttle craft after the work had been completed and tested. We were never asked if we would like a tour, invited to spend the night or stay and share a meal with the personnel or inhabitants of the facility. We did however get a chance to see some of the people. They were usually pale, unhealthy looking both physically and mentally and seemed very much like slave labor. On more than one occasion we saw four identical people carrying crates and other items around that were obviously clones. I did notice in one colony that there was what looked like an “Art Wall” where people were hanging art work that they had drawn and painted. This was the only time I saw anything that looked like it was meant to be positive for the metal health of the inhabitants. These were always places that we were relieved to leave. When we would visit the military outposts they were regimented but had a completely different feel or energy about them. We were also more comfortable in some of those locations because we had actually seen and been a part of them being built at an earlier date.

Q3. Were you ever briefed about and/or experience the atmosphere on Mars? Is it breathable for short periods as some whistleblowers claim?

Yes, I was suited up and observed some of the outposts being constructed in the Northern hemisphere. There is a thin atmosphere (like being at very high altitudes on Earth) but the atmospheric pressure is very low as is the temperature most of the time. There are times depending on Mars season and weather that make it possible for very short exposure time on the surface. I would imagine that some have slightly acclimated to it. I would not want to spend any amount of time outside of the light duty suits we wore especially if you were doing anything physically exertive. There were some small wild life and vegetation that we observed in the general location of where the construction was being done. The sky was a light blue to lavender and pinkish especially during sunset when there wasn't a lot of dust in the upper atmosphere (which occurred frequently when we were on the surface).

Q4. Does the Solar Warden Space Program operate any off-planet bases? If so, where are these located?

Yes, there were some stations (Located in certain areas of the Solar System where vessels would dock for repairs, conferences and personnel transfers etc…), there were also other bases on some moons and even Venus (on the surface and in the upper atmosphere). There are also some bases in nearby Star Systems that I know next to nothing about (never had a "Need to Know").

Q5. In the 1963, the USAF announced the Manned Orbiting Laboratory (MOL) where they secretly trained military astronauts to go into space to conduct space surveillance. The MOL was publicly canceled in 1969 apparently due to the development of unmanned satellites. Was the cancellation of MOL genuine? Did the military astronauts go on to serve with Solar Warden or another space program?

The Earth Based Military Black Ops Services have had separate and ongoing lower level space programs from the beginning. They are very compartmentalized, and those who actually operate craft and stations in various orbital zones around Earth never have an opportunity to see what else is going on out there. NASA ISS see their activities, these lower level military black op's programs see the NASA, Advanced (Breakaway) Secret Space Program activities as well as some activities of off-world groups. They know there is a lot more going on beyond their programs but do not have a need to know and are debriefed routinely by the Earth military forces to get as much information as they can about what may be going on in the Break Away Secret Space Programs that are more advanced. Very few below those in command of these black op's programs and the operators know of the other activities going on in the Sol System. The support and infrastructure portion of these black op's programs are not read into the small circle of information known by the operators and command structure and are kept oblivious of the other activities being observed outside the atmosphere of the Earth.

That being said, there have been many other space stations and similar training labs that have been launched into orbit for periods of time, used in secret and then allowed to burn up in reentry after they have served their purpose. I do not know if the particular orbital laboratory was ever an active program or not. The LOC [Lunar Operations Command] would keep up with the “traffic” of all space programs (civilian/military/intelligence satellites, NASA, secret military, other nations and of all of the Advanced Secret Space Programs) and their assets to try to plan and schedule their locations to prevent them from being visible to each other as much as possible. This includes keeping track of ground based astronomical observatories and their highly documented and controlled access times and the windows of the sky they are scheduled to observe. This is why there are no real accidents when it comes to SSP vessels flying through the live video feeds of the NASA ISS. The traffic is very highly planned and tracked and if a vessel/craft is caught on the live feed it was done on purpose.

Q6. In 1959, the US Army proposed Project Horizon which examined the possibility of establishing a Moon base. Officially, Project Horizon didn’t progress beyond the feasibility stage. Is this accurate or did Project Horizon secretly proceed and/or was it combined with any other lunar base program?

I do not know if this was one of the programs that was combined or cannibalized into the decades’ long expansion of the Lunar Operation Center or not. There were several programs that were not only on the books but also already funded that were merged into both the advanced Secret Space Programs (advanced) as well as into the Military Black Op’s Space Programs. Some people think it is ridiculous that there would be lower level military black ops space programs (Space Plane/Shuttle etc…) as well as the continued development of advanced air craft based on 19th/20th Century aeronautics principals. With all of the technology available in the “Break Away Civilizations” this is pretty ridiculous. When you think about the fact that most of the people in the Aeronautic Industries and Military know nothing about the Break Away Civilizations and their advancements then you will understand why they are still spending trillions of dollars developing technology on a separate developmental track. They are developing technology to fight wars in the only way they know exists.

Q7. You have said that the Nazis established a base on the Moon, and this was later built over creating Lunar Operations Command. When did the Nazi's establish their moon base?

They had made several attempts at creating a moon base that did not go so well going back to the 1930's. They did find an ancient building that was obviously built by much larger beings that they could cement and repair enough to pressurize and use as a temporary base while they constructed the underground base that had a few visible structures on the surface one of which did take the shape of a Swastika. This base was still being built when they made the break through deals with the Americans in the early 1950's that gave them access to the Industrial Might that had cost them the European War. They now used this Industrial Power (Soon to be known as the Military Industrial Complex) to their favor and built out a massive base that went down many levels in a "Bell Shape" and the surface structures built around the former structures to become what we now call the Lunar Operation Command aka LOC.

Q8. Which group of extraterrestrials helped the Nazi's in their battle with Admiral Byrd in 1946/1947, and developing an off-world presence?

There was help from the Draco Federation as well as a group that the NAZI's were led to believe were ET's (referred to as "Arianni" or "Aryans", sometimes called "Nordics") but were actually an Ancient Earth Human Break Away Civilization that had developed a Space Program (referred to as "The Silver Fleet") and created vast bases below the Himalayan Mountains (largest in Tibet and call the system Agartha) and a few other regions. The first craft they built used Mercury turbines, and electro-gravity engines were developed by the assistance of this group. Again the NAZI's and to this day many Earth Humans who are in contact with them and others believe them to be ET's (because of their deceptions) when they are actually very much Earth Based Humans from Ancient Break Away Civilizations. I have heavily avoided speaking in depth about the few Ancient Break Away Earth Civilizations that have Space Programs and massive bases on the Earth, the Moon and elsewhere in the Sol System and other Sol Systems. Some of them have been extremely deceptive and convinced some people that they are ET groups that are here to assist Humanity. Some people have memorized some of these stories like some people memorize religious text. The Illuminati/Cabal has had a falling out with some of them and want them exposed for what they are. I think they should do the dirty work. I am not going to cause controversy that will just be a distraction from the main Blue Avian Message of Becoming Loving, Forgiving and Focusing on Expanding your Consciousness and Vibration.

Q9. Do you know anything about Hans Kammler and the Kammler Group that was in charge of the covert Nazi reverse engineering program, and its relocation to Antarctica/South America/Moon?

Yes, there was much documentation about him and his teams being in both the three known Antarctic (Cities/Bases) and several secret underground bases in Argentina. If he was stationed on the Moon I didn't see anything about that.

Q10. What role did Maria Orsic and the Vril Society play in the Nazi moon base?

The Vril, Thule and Order of the Black Sun Orders were all involved in these programs. They had overlapping ideologies and agenda's. Much of the Star Wars ideology of "The Force" and "Dark Lord Siths" and their "Masters" and The Power of the Dark Side, Dark Energy and Dark Star Energy was a mixture of science and religion to them. Many in the Intel Community became quite convinced that Maria Orsic was one of the "Blondes" that would land in UFO's and talk to people in German pretending to be an ET from another star system. When some of the witnesses were shown her photo they identified her as the same person that they had met from the Flying Saucer. She has obviously made it to the Antarctic Bases/Cities where she was taking part in a program using the NAZI's Flying Disk technologies to spread disinformation through some contactees. What part she may have played in the Moon Base I do not know. I do know that these "Societies" were very much the backbone of what survived the war and who were in control of the facilities along with the group they believed was ET as well as the Draco Federation that they allied themselves with.

Q11. Is it true that in addition to the NAZI SS flying saucer program run by Hans Kammler, that the Vril Society had their own, possibly more successful program due to ET assistance?

The Vril, Thule, Black Sun Societies (Kammler was “NAZI SS” and very active in the Black Sun and Thule Societies) were involved in several parallel programs to develop advanced technology. They had channeled information that had sent them on a path to reverse engineer ancient documents from the East which led them to build very similar craft as one the Ancient Break Away Earth Human Civilizations that convinced them that they were ET’s from another Star System. A couple of these Ancient Break Away Civilizations had done the same thing to the early Secret Space Programs until it was discovered that they were not ET’s at all but were actually Humans of self-isolated genetic groups that belonged to extremely ancient civilizations that had existed on the face of the Earth. They sometimes looked slightly different from us but were very much our genetic forefathers. At the same time these Societies had made contact with the Draco Federation and another group that avoided the Draco’s. The German Occultists were very busy from the early 1900’s especially the time just before, during and after World War One. Their major breakthrough’s occurred in the late 1930’s and these Secret Societies had already began their own mini-break away civilization that was kept from the German War Machine and Leadership.

Q12. Did Orsic/Nazi organize an expedition to the Aldebaran star system?

Yes, there was an early attempt at sending their early craft designs through natural portals before they fully understood portal physics. This “expedition” ended up being much like the Philadelphia Experiment that the Americans would end up doing years later. There is a lot that goes into portal travel and an entire new physics and mathematics model was developed for calculating travel. Without the help of both off world groups and the deceptive Ancient Break Away Civilizations masquerading as ET’s they and the early “Joint Programs” (post Eisenhower Treaty Era, which became the various SSP’s) would have had to have built these models from the ground up and learn many lessons the hard way. I have written the basics of “Traveling the Cosmic Web” aka Portal Travel in an article in the link below. To understand the logistics of portal travel between astronomical bodies both inside a Sol System and between Star Systems this basic article should be consulted. At some point I will expand on this information and provide more details on the point to point traveling protocols discussed in the article.

It wasn't that the NAZI base that became the LOC was abandoned. During the 1950's and after they had successfully infiltrated and subverted the Military Industrial Complex and major Corporate heads they had effectively won control of the direction of not only the Break Away Civilization Programs but also the mainstream government and financial system. It was a very effective and silent coup that gutted what was once the American Republic and turned it too into a Corporate Entity with each of us being "Assets" with our very own serial numbers. This plan was in action far before World War One by various secret societies who controlled the financial system and as many know financed both sides of the wars. When both Truman and Eisenhower signed treaties with the NAZI Break Away Civilization/Societies it was then that the already well placed Operation Paperclip Operatives (in Military, Corporate Industry, Intelligence and established Secret and Public Space Programs) easily slid into more powerful and influential positions over the massive industrial complex of the USA that they coveted to expand their operations in space and form what would later become the ICC (as well as were involved in setting up all of the other Space Programs). So they did not lose the Lunar Base, they infiltrated the groups that put a massive effort into expanding it into the massive complex that it is now.

Q14. Where exactly is the "Lunar Operations Command" on the moon, how big is it, and do you know of any NASA pictures revealing its location?

I cannot give any direct information about the location on the Lunar Surface of the LOC. Yes, there have been photos taken of it by NASA/Military and a couple other countries. The photos have been airbrushed to remove all structures from the Moon that NASA employees believe are ancient. There is a story about the "Ancient Builders" that makes its rounds and there are items found below the ground in deep caverns in the Earth that expeditions go after to locate that were engineered by "The Ancient Builder Race". People debate the “Hollow Earth” theory. It is not hollow but it is a “Honeycomb” and some of the caverns are more massive than anyone can imagine.

Q15. You say that the Nazi’s infiltrated the U.S. secret space program, is that the dark fleet/Cabal and/or Solar Warden, or another SSP?

Yes, I speak about it in some of the other questions here and in an article I wrote on my website. The NAZI Break Away/Secret Society Groups and their Allied ET/Ancient Break Away Civilization Groups needed the massive industrial machine of the United States that had defeated the Axis powers in World War Two. They had the Science and Technology covered but if they wanted to meet their goals of moving out into the Sol System to colonize on a large scale and setup industrial facilities and infrastructure across the Sol System to mine materials and create what they have today which has been largely achieved through the ICC Group Effort. When they had forced the hand of the United States to sign a treaty and create a joint secret space program they had already positioned operatives throughout the Military, Intelligence, Aerospace and Corporate world. They already had the Financial/Banking world in various society hands for generations before World War One. These groups were all woven in and working together with other groups that are under the Illuminati/Cabal Umbrella. The U.S. Military had known about the NAZI’s landing in their exotic craft dressed up and approaching people in Europe presenting themselves as benevolent ET’s from far away star systems (we know where they learned that trick) that were here to assist Humanity. After the treaty was signed and the joint Secret Space Programs began in earnest things quickly got out of hand and the NAZI Break Away group won the race to infiltrate and take over the other side. They soon controlled every aspect of the U.S. from the Financial System, The Military Industrial Complex and soon after all three branches of the government itself. This may be very difficult for some people to believe, however the more people are waking up to what our own Government has been up to the last 70 years the more people are coming around to realizing what has happened to the US.

Q16. Where do the Nazis fit in terms of the SSP Alliance and the different ancient civilizations? Are they part of the Dark Fleet SSP?

As explained, the NAZI remnants that were made up mostly of Secret Societies that created a “Break Away Civilization” that kept the most advanced technology secret from even their highest Military and Political leaders, setup enclaves in South America and Antarctica. The locations in Antarctica were some ancient civilization ruins that had remained occupied by certain groups in thermal area’s that cause area’s similar to lava tubes and domes under the glaciers. There was an underground and under glacier city complex that was already occupied and setup in a couple of locations and the NAZI’s renovated an area that was mostly crushed above the surface but had plenty of room under the domed ice, thermal underground energy and caverns (accessible via U-boat under the ice flows and openings that made it ideal for a hidden multipurpose base) that were perfect for them to secretly build out during the entire Second World War. They had been making contact with civilians from various countries for years claiming to be aliens themselves for counter intelligence reasons.

The US had figured this out quite early and after the failed Operation High Jump Mission the Operation Paperclip Scientists were asked to negotiate meetings. The NAZI Breakaway group knew that the Americans had recovered crashed craft from several different species of off world visitors that were so far advanced that they were getting nowhere with the reverse engineering of their technology. They had also received intelligence from their Paperclip spies that the Americans had implemented an Executive Order making the existence of alien life the most classified subject on the planet. The reason being that the development and release of free energy would quickly destroy the Oil Trade, and soon thereafter the entire Babylonian Money Magic Slave System that all Elites use to control the masses.

The NAZI’s used this to their advantage in some very public sorties over Washington D.C. and highly Secret Atomic Warfare Bases to mention a few. Eisenhower finally relented and signed a treaty with them (and a few other groups both ET and Ancient Civilizations pretending to be ET). The Americans fully planned on infiltrating the NAZI’s and taking them over. As is not obvious, the opposite occurred. “NAZI Occult Societies” therefore infiltrated every single high tech corporation and position of power inside the now “Joint Break Away Civilization/Program”. They have been involved in all western space programs and projects ever since. It is true that the Dark Fleet personnel have been called “Storm Troopers” and “Space Nazis” both because of the way they act, dress, the symbols they wear as well as the shape of their Vessels (Star Wars Like). They are very dark individuals who work alongside the Draco Vessels mostly outside the Sol System helping them in offensive activities against enemies off the Draco Joint Federation.
